Dear Mr. President,

A stimulus for rural economies, a symbol of national endurance, and the keystone species of fragile ecosystems, wild salmon play a vital role in the Pacific Northwest. Unfortunately, your administration has failed to implement existing restoration measures while simultaneously disabling fundamental laws that protect salmon. It was no surprise when Judge Redden found the Federal Salmon Plan illegal and ordered it rewritten.

I want to reap the benefits of free-flowing rivers. Please make the partial removal of the four Lower Snake River dams a mandatory action in the Federal Salmon Plan. If we remove those dams and replace the benefits that the dams provide we can build a future that works for salmon and people. We can restore salmon, revive economies, and save taxpayers millions of dollars. Please include this letter in the formal comment period during your re-write of the Federal Salmon Plan; i.e., FCRPS Biological Opinion.

Sincerely,

We need a Salmon Plan that will restore salmon

Dear President Bush,

Since the time of Lewis & Clark, wild salmon have played a vital role in the Northwest's economy, culture and environment. You once promised your leadership to protect and restore our salmon and our communities. You have failed to live up to that promise.

You have a new opportunity today to craft an effective salmon recovery plan. Scientists agree that removal of the four lower Snake River dams is the only option that will restore our endangered Snake River salmon. We must take action before it is too late.

Please include removal of these four dams as a recovery action in the new Federal Salmon Plan. Our wild salmon and steelhead, and our region's communities, depend on it.

Dear President Bush:

Fishing supports my job; it is my recreation; it puts food on my table. My way of life depends on thriving populations of salmon and steelhead just as the Northwest economy depends on the abundance of salmon and steelhead and the tens of thousands of jobs they support. And yet, your agencies are failing to protect Northwest salmon runs. They have not implemented existing restoration measures and, to add insult to injury, they have attempted to disable fundamental protections for our fish.

If you truly want to help the Northwest, create a Federal Salmon Plan that will provide real benefits to salmon fishing communities. Scientists agree that the partial removal of the four lower Snake River dams is the most effective way to restore Northwest salmon. Something must be done before fishing-dependent jobs and communities go the way of the salmon – and disappear.

Please include my letter in the formal comment period during your re-write of the Federal Salmon Plan; i.e., FERPS Biological Opinion.

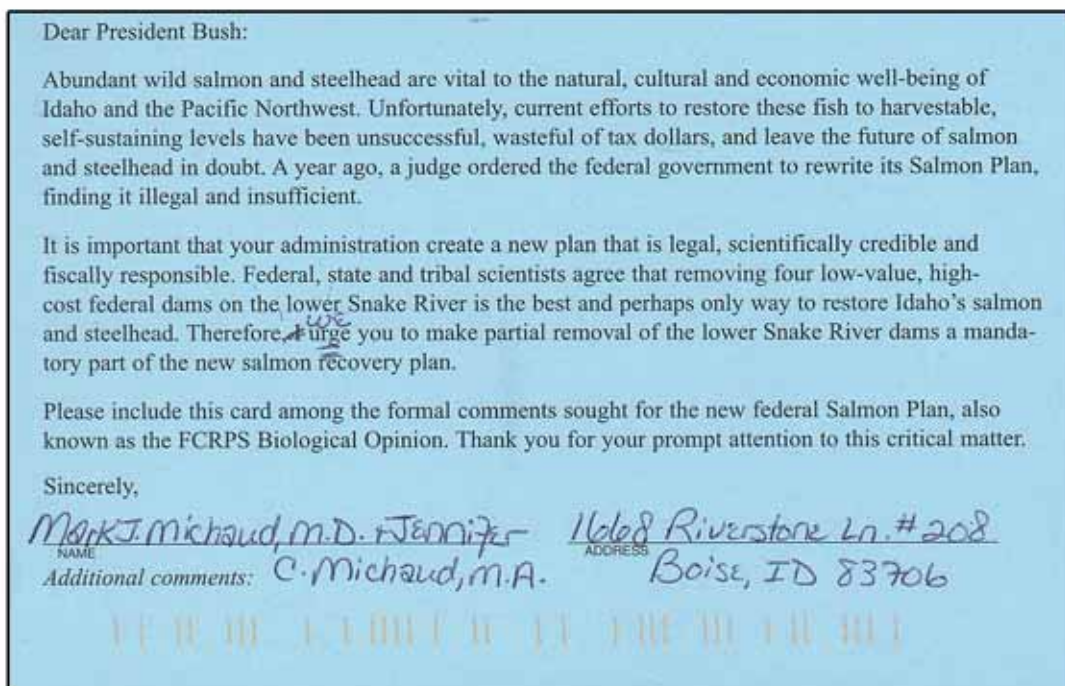

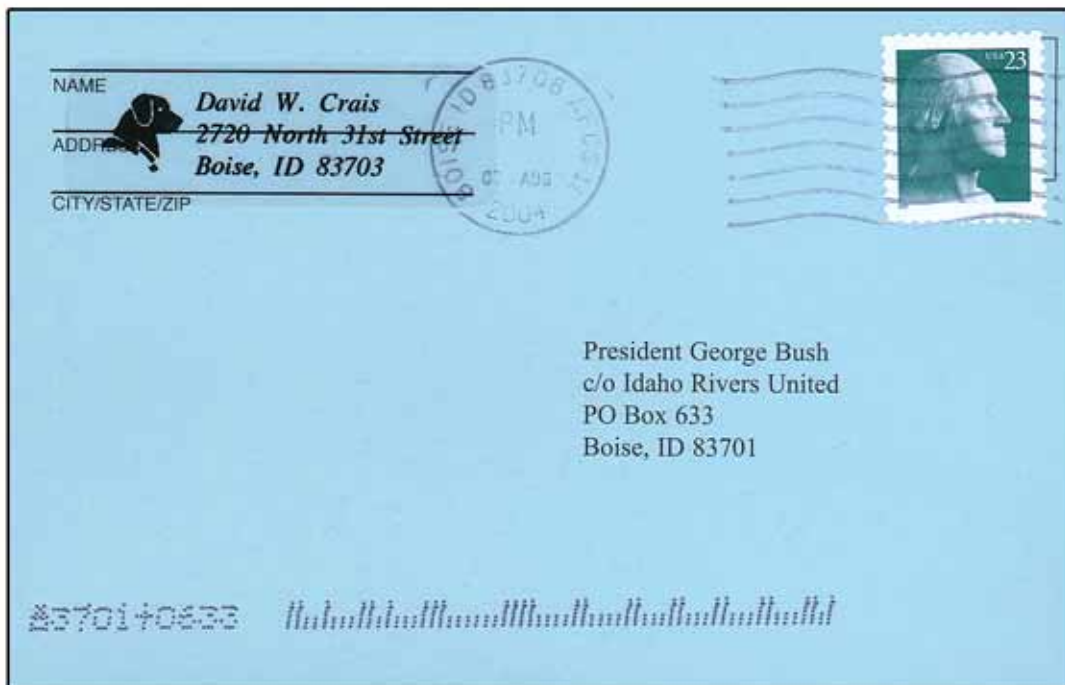

Sincerely and respectfully yours,

Dear President Bush:

Since the time when Lewis and Clark traveled the Pacific Northwest, wild salmon have been an economic asset for rural communities and a keystone species of the region. Unfortunately, your administration has failed to implement recovery measures and disabled laws that protect salmon. It was no surprise that a federal judge found the Federal Salmon Plan illegal and ordered your administration to rewrite the plan this year.

You promised real help for our salmon and our communities. You have not lived up to that promise. We need a new plan that is legal, scientifically-credible, and fiscally-responsible. Federal scientists agree removal of the four lower Snake River dams is the best recovery option.

I urge you to include removal of those four dams as a recovery action in the rewrite of the Federal Salmon Plan. Our communities and environment depend on it. Please record my letter in any formal comment period for the rewrite of the Federal Salmon Plan, i.e. FCRPS Biological Opinion.

Please, help restore Northwest salmon!

Dear President Bush:

Abundant wild salmon and steelhead are vital to the natural, cultural and economic well-being of Idaho and the Pacific Northwest. Unfortunately, current efforts to restore these fish to harvestable, self-sustaining levels have been unsuccessful, wasteful of tax dollars, and leave the future of salmon and steelhead in doubt. A year ago, a judge ordered the federal government to rewrite its Salmon Plan, finding it illegal and insufficient.

Therefore, I urge you to direct responsible federal agencies to consider all options when rewriting the federal Salmon Plan — including partial removal of four low value, high cost dams on the lower Snake River. Our nation must develop a plan that will restore wild salmon and steelhead to Idaho's rivers, and other Northwest Rivers, in harvestable, self-sustaining numbers.

Please include this postcard among the formal comments sought for the new federal Salmon Plan.
Thank you.
